

Comment of the week

Markets present a new correction due to uncertainty and fears of a new recession. The S&P 500 fell 0.1%, less than the Nasdaq which lost 0.9% in line with global markets, with Europe and Japan correcting -0.13% and -1.9% respectively.

In the run-up to the spring meetings of the International Monetary Fund in mid-April, the entity is sending a warning about world economic growth for the next five years, which it predicts will be the weakest in more than thirty years. They estimate that the world economy will grow 3%, below the average of the last two decades (3.8%).

With this context, April begins with valuations in 10-year sovereign debt securities of developed countries. United States with a fall of 8 bps and Germany 11 bps.

Disappointing news is still being delivered in the American financial sector and there were falls in the share price of large American banks such as Bank of America (BAC), due to the taking of profits by some agents, and the expectation of earnings reports from the first quarter that will be announced starting this week. (BAC April 18)

On the other hand, in Europe the strength of the Euro remains, a region that continues to show resistance, with the PMI indicators indicating an acceleration of activity in the first quarter. The manufacturing PMI fell to 47.3 units and remains in contractive territory. However, the services PMI increased to 55 from 52 and the composite - which brings together the results of the manufacturing and services sectors - closed at 53.7 compared to 52.

In line with this good performance, in China the Caixin services PMI rose to 57.8 in March from 55.0 in February, above expectation.

In raw materials, the unexpected cut in oil production by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) and its allies (Russia and other satellite countries) has generated new upward momentum for crude oil prices. The barrel of Brent has been located again in the area of 85 dollars. However, several oil ETFs suffer a massive outflow of money and cast doubt on the long-term crude forecasts and uncertainty remains as higher energy prices may affect inflation again.

GLOBAL GROWTH WOULD BE THE LOWEST IN 5 YEARS

Historic unemployment rate in the United States

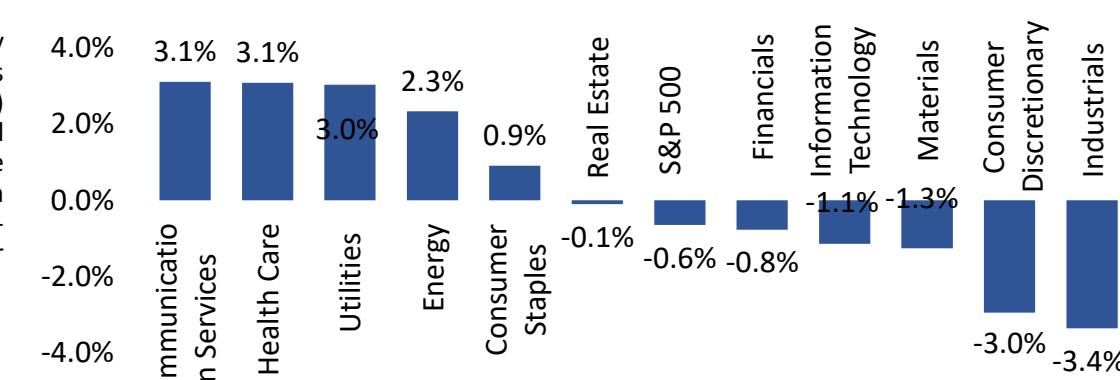

Source: Compiled by In On Capital.

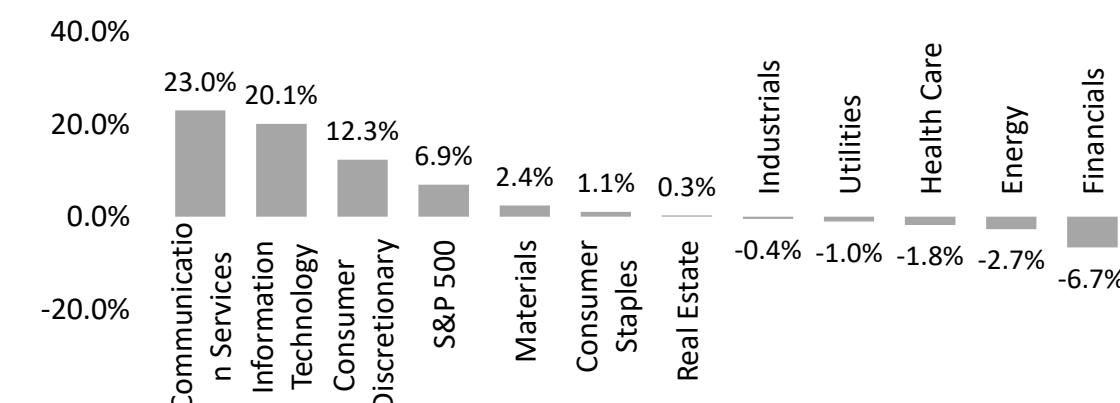

In economic data, in the United States, the dynamics of the labor market showed a slight deceleration in March, registering the creation of 236 thousand payrolls, below what was observed the previous month (326 thousand) and the expectations of analysts (239 thousand). However, the unemployment rate dipped to 3.5% very close to record lows, sending mixed signals about the impact of the Federal Reserve's (Fed) monetary policy tightening.
