

Comment of the week

Markets show gains. The S&P 500 rose 0.79%, the Nasdaq appreciated 0.13% in line with world markets, with Europe and Japan with the highest appreciations of 1.89% and 2.93% respectively.

IMF spring meeting conclusions:

According to the entity's forecasts, global growth will fall from 3.4% in 2022 to 2.8% in 2023, before stabilizing at 3.0% in 2024. Advanced economies are expected to experience a particularly pronounced slowdown in growth, from 2.7% in 2022 to 1.3% in 2023. In an alternative scenario with greater stress on the financial sector, global growth declines to approximately 2.5% in 2023, while growth in advanced economies falls below 1%. Likewise, they expect the headline level of inflation to decrease from 8.7% in 2022 to 7.0% in 2023 due to lower commodity prices, although core inflation is likely to decline more slowly.

On the other hand, the IMF warns about risks to international financial stability. Among the concerns they mention the sustainability of sovereign debt, the vulnerability of non-bank lenders, as well as conditions in the commercial real estate market.

In the context of markets, last week the season of corporate reports formally began in the US, particularly the results of the banking sector were announced, a highly sensitive and expected topic in view of the events of the SVB, Signature Bank and Credit Suisse. The results showed strength in the banking sector. As of 1Q23, Citi, JP Morgan and Wells Fargo reported figures higher than those estimated by the consensus of analysts. In particular, Citi reported revenue growth of 12.6%, which implied an EPS of $2.19 vs. $1.65. In contrast, JP Morgan reported an increase in revenues and profits of 24.8% and 52.0% (an EPS of $4.18 vs. $3.38). Finally, Wells Fargo presented an increase in revenues and profits of 16.9% and 31.8% (an EPS of $1.23 vs. $1.13).

Crude prices rose and posted their fourth straight week of gains on Friday, after the International Energy Agency (IEA) said it expects global demand to rise to a record this year on the back of China's consumption recovery. The entity also warned that the production cuts announced by OPEC+ producers could aggravate the oil supply deficit and harm consumers.

Source: Compiled by In On Capital.

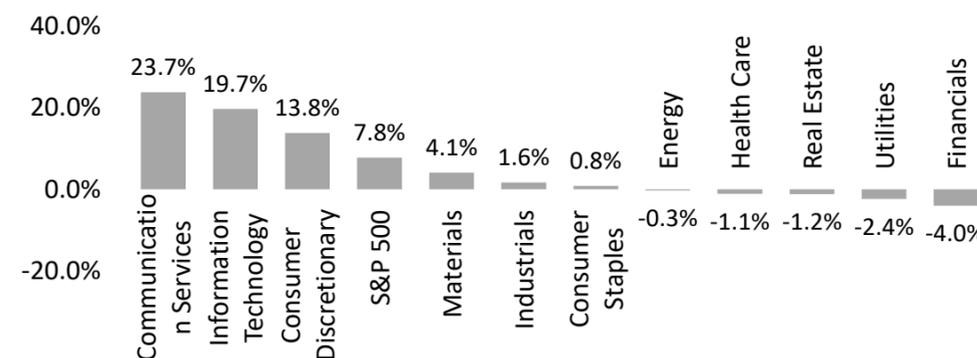

In the US, inflation fell in March for the ninth consecutive month, to 5%. The level is the lowest in almost two years, but underlying inflation is still not reassuring, as it rises one tenth to 5.6% and is already above the general rate.
