

WEEKLY MARKET SUMMARY

Monday 3 March 2025

Wall Street closed the last week of February in the red, underlining a difficult February for the markets in general. The S&P 500 closed the week down 0.98%, while the Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 0.95% and the Nasdaq -3.47%.

The post-election enthusiasm that initially fueled Wall Street's rally following Donald Trump's victory has begun to wane. Market sentiment has been weighed down by uncertainty surrounding the administration's tariff policies, persistent concerns about inflation and signs of an economic slowdown.

RELEVANT NEWS

- One of the most closely watched events of the week has been Nvidia's quarterly earnings report. Over the past two years, the chipmaker's explosive growth has led it to become the world's second-largest company by market capitalization. Although Nvidia beat expectations with strong results in the fourth fiscal quarter, its shares fell more than 8% as investors reacted to the high expectations created by its recent meteoric rise.
- Cryptocurrencies suffered a sharp decline, with Bitcoin falling below $80,000 overnight, down 25% from its high on January 20, coinciding with Trump's inauguration. The correction comes amid growing riskoff sentiment fueled by tariff concerns, leading to safehaven demand shifting elsewhere. On Tuesday alone, more than $1 billion was withdrawn from spot Bitcoin ETFs, the largest single-day outflow since their launch in January 2024.

Trump confirmed that the 25% tariffs on imports from Canada and Mexico, previously delayed, will come into effect in March, along with an additional 10% tariff on Chinese imports.

- Trump's White House meeting with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy meant to discuss possible peace efforts in the Russia-Ukraine conflict and negotiate a minerals deal ended without an agreement, as Zelenskyy was seen abruptly leaving after what was described as a heated exchange.
- In economic data, the core personal consumption expenditures price index for January was in line with expectations. The U.S. economy grew at an annualized pace of 2.3% last quarter, in line with consensus estimates.

 The American Association of Individual Investors noted in its survey for the week ending Feb. 26 that the bearish camp (those who think the market will decline over the next six months) jumped to 60.6% from 40.5% the week before.

Bearish sentiment has not been this high since September 2022, when the level reached 60.87%. That year, the S&P 500 fell 25% from January to October and recorded the worst performance in the first six months of the year since 1970.

TOPIC OF THE WEEK

Gráfico 1: Futuro del cobre (4,53 $/libra)

Electrification history supports future copper demand

Copper tends to gauge the direction of the economy, as it is closely tied to demand for infrastructure and construction. It has experienced multiple price cycles throughout its trading history, with significant volatility during periods of industrial expansion and contraction (Chart 1).

Despite a correction in 2022, due to the economic slowdown, copper prices have shown great resilience. This resilience demonstrates a fundamental shift in copper demand dynamics compared to previous cycles. Recent technical analysis shows that copper has broken out of a seven-month downtrend line, suggesting a possible new uptrend.

While tariff threats appear to have contributed to this breakout as traders anticipate changes in trade policy, deeper structural forces support copper's underlying strength and indicate this move could be sustainable.

ASSET VISION IN ON CAPITAL

The market is starting to get nervous, increasing the likelihood of a future stagflation. As evidence, real rates and the dollar are falling on one side... and breakeven inflation is rising on the other. Investors remain skeptical about the implementation of Trump's tariffs and the Fed's ability to lower rates in the near future.

Sentiment has been changing and a certain risk off now seems to be taking the lead. Breadth indicators continue to deteriorate and the number of companies above their 200-day moving average continues to diverge sharply from prices.

We remain cautious in the short term. There is currently some sector rotation away from IT companies, which hurts the expensive US market more than the rest.

As for monetary policy, the Federal Reserve is currently on hold. This is a wait-and-see approach that allows it to better judge the economic impact of President Trump's upcoming economic policies.
